We Heal Together

Who Are Peer Supporters?

Peer Supporters are people who have walked the path of recovery and have personally overcome challenges related to wellness, mental health, and substance use. They have learned many lessons along the way and are eager to share their experience, strength, and hope with you to encourage your own recovery.

Peer Supporters have also completed training to learn the most helpful and effective ways to use their knowledge and personal experiences to help you thrive and overcome the challenges you may face.

What Can Peer Supporters Do For You?

Peer Support Specialists can:

- Help you identify and achieve goals related to recovery, and develop a wellness plan that makes sense for you
- Offer stories from their own recovery about challenges they overcame and strategies that they found to be helpful
- Help you learn effective coping strategies/skills
- Assist in connecting you to other community resources
- Provide support in times of crisis
- Walk the Red Road of Recovery along with you

Who Does The Peer Support Program Serve?

The Peer Support Program serves any Tulalip Tribal members or other Native person who is in recovery, or would like to recover. This includes:

- Any tribal members experiencing challenges related to mental health
- Any tribal member experiencing challenges with substance/drug use
- Tribal members who are expectant mothers struggling with substance use or mental health challenges
